Personal Note:

Having spent the better part of my life in the restoration industry I feel somewhat qualified to make the following observation. Many franchise companies are replacing many high quality independent restoration contractors. There is a place for both types of service. Premium service is still a very valuable commodity. As an example, we have “re-done” many jobs for customers left unsatisfied by franchise companies. To my knowledge our work has never been “re-done” by any company. I do not mean to imply all franchise companies are not up to par. I am trying to underscore the fact that just because an individual has purchased the rights to a national name, (a franchise), does not earn them years of important field experience. Long-term field experience brings your customer a peace of mind, which remains a key factor in mutual cooperation and satisfaction.

After 28 years I still personally “run” every job – hands-on! - Personal professional service never goes out of date.

Sincerely,

William. Birx
